A commonplace piece of land—pleasant enough, to he sure, with its rolling fields, its springs and trees, but there are thousands of more fertile and more beautiful acres in Kentucky. Why set it aside with pomp and ceremony? Why distinguish it above all the farms of all the state?

Washington taught the world to know us The first won for us our independence

The first won for us our unoepencence.

Let us give to each the glory due him.

There is enough for both, and for our nation.

This is the day of Liucoth. And as he has filled the century, growing from humblest hirth to highest place, to martyred death and world-wide fame, so will he go on growing, through all the centuries that are to come, as an in Thus has the world been rohhed of the real Acbilles, the real Caesar, the real Washington, who have passed from human semblance to fanciful shadows.

Look at Abe Lincoln's face.

Nature never gave that face as an indication of any character to be sentimentally etherialized. His habits of life molded its lines in steel.

One may control one's voice and discipline one's man-ner, but the face is heyond command. Day and night, wak-ing and sleeping, one's character is heing traced there, to

"And as we must hold to the sad, rugged, howely, in-tensyl-human face of Lincoln, and love it for what it is, so let us hold to him, too, just as he was—the grandest, most readly human figure looming up in our history as a nation.

With all his awkwardness of figure, with all his homeli-of manner, with all his simplicity of speech-that was Abe Lincoln. And let us keep him—plain Ahe—infinitely greater and infinitely more sacred than any mythological god, or histor-ians' fancies or poets' dreams.

Coming from nearest to nothing, he arose to nearest to everything. Born of the poor whites of a slave state, and inheriting the hatred held by his class for the negro, his hand freed the millions of black slaves.

A self-made man, with scorcely one winter's schooling from books, he contributed some of the finest gems of the world's literature. His Gettyshurg speech and his letter to Mrs. Bixhy, printed in other columns of this paper today, are unequaled in all the classics for depth and limpidity of sentiment. They ought to he read with reverence today by
